Photography is somewhat of a new experience for me. I've grown up making home movies with my parents, youtube videos with my friends, and professional videos with my work. But trying to capture an absolutely still moment has been a new kind of challenge. My biggest concern was "how will I be able to capture all the emotion I want to in one frame, that doesn't even move?"

Over these last few months experimenting with a camera in way's I've never done before, I believe I'm finally beginning to understand and appreciate photography as an artform. Join me as we look back on all that I've experienced.

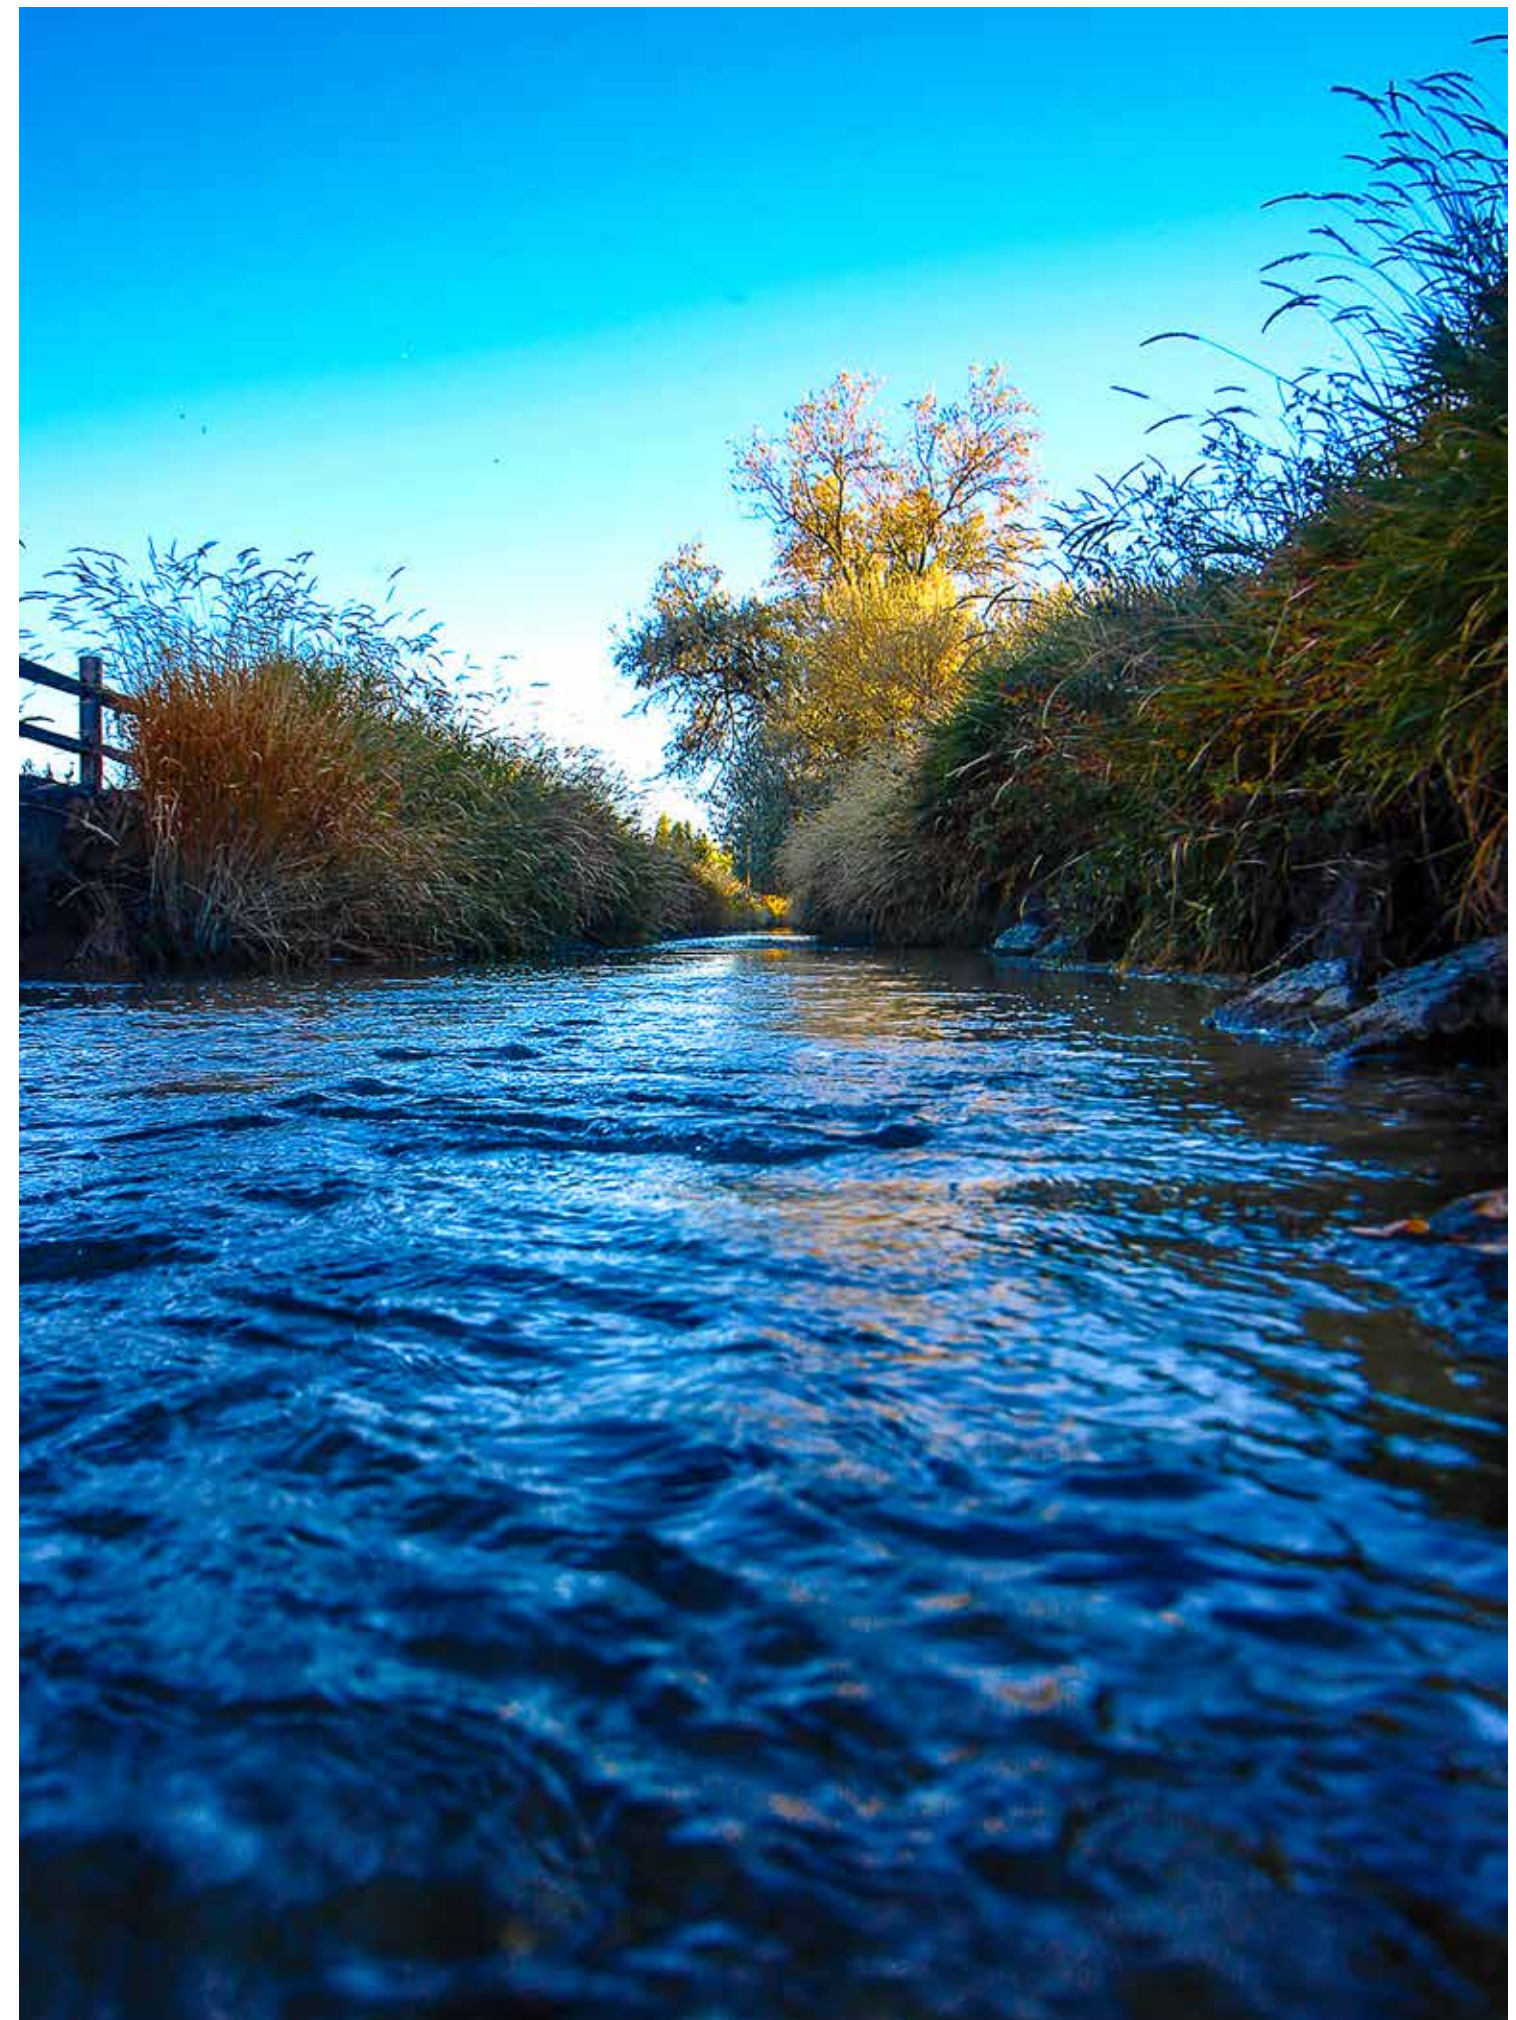

shoes over the wall.

Nature photography and cinematography have always been huge loves of mine. Having grown up in Western Montana amid the beautiful Rockies and Glacier National Park, its no suprise just how beautiful I see the world. The difficulty is trying to express all that beauty through individual images of time and space. But the best part of photography is you can always take more photos. Which is good to know, since even the beauty of nature can be found in your own back yard.

Macro photography was definitely on my bucket list when I first began my photography journey. But non the less, it's become one of my favorites! There is so much detail in the little things in life, take pleasure in those little things.

Portraiture is every millenials favorite style of photography, and for a good reason. Who doesn't want to make everyone beautiful, and in turn yourself. I had such an amazing time working with so many ever so talented models. Helping show their best sides have definetly brought out mine as well.
